Correspondence of the LIVING CHURCH.

VIRGINIA CITY, MONTANA, July 16.

My last letter closed with the long stage ride from the Terminus of the Northern Utah, to Virginia City. To say it was a sore experience, would be true to the letter, though not to the usual meaning of the phrase. The first twentyfour hours of staging, old travelers say, is the hardest, and after that a man can endure almost any amount of it. Perhaps because the weak ones are all killed off the first day! It amazes me to realize what a terrific journey it was, only a few years ago, from the Union Pacific to this perance than that which somes from alcoholic point; yet many a woman of delicate nerves, accustomed to the elegance of an Eastern home, has made the journey with a baby in her arms. you could give, upon the subject, the most appalling testimony. How sue it would be, we have had occasion to see with our own eyes. It has permeated all classes, as well in the avenues as in the slums. So great are its ravages, even among the women of the country, that they can no longer be concealed. There has lately been when hostile Indians were on the war path, and no longer be concealed. There has lately been organized a national hospital, on a large scale, for the treatment of intemperance and opium eating in women. Among those interested in it, are the most distinguished men, of all classes, in lawlessness, so far as I hear, among the settlers or in the towns. There is gambling in nearly all The existence of the plague is thus acknowledged, the saloons, and occasionally a shooting fray, but

The first Church Service within the Territory of Montana was held in Virginia City, on Christmas Day, 1865, by a lay-reader. In July, 1867, Bishop Tuttle and the Rev. E. N. Goddard, held services in an upper room. The Bishop remained several months in charge of the Mission, (St. Paul's), and a frame church was completed and opened in 1868. The church was, at that time, unpainted, without pews, and with muslin for certain stage, may be regarded as a form of lu-window lights. On the 28th of June, the Rev. nacy, or disease. The town is not now and has not been for some years, what it was in the days of gold excitement, about fifteen years ago. It is estimated that at that time there were, in the city and neighborhood, from ten to fifteen thousand people. Alder Gulch was then the finest gold region of the world, but was worked over in a few years, and is now being worked the second time.

The population has largely decreased, and much business has moved away. There are not now, probably, a thousand people in and around the town. Whether it again becomes an important centre, depends on the course of the railroad just entering the Territory from the South. Some improvements are going on, indicating the confidence of the people in the permanence of the town. But no dependence can be placed on anything in this country, until the railroads have drawn the lines. A wonderful development is in the near future, but just where it will show itself cannot, perhaps, be predicted. As our philosophic driver remarked last night, whirling us through Alder Gulch by starlight: "If our fore sight was as good as our hind sight, we might make some mighty good investments now, in Montana.

It is a pleasure and pride to see the Church marching on with the adventurous progress of our Western Empire. It was a far-sighted provision of the Church to send a Bishop to this wild country in advance of schools and railroads, and it was a blessed Providence that indicated such a choice as Bishop Tuttle. His name is a household word in three territories, each large enough for an empire; and through his untiring have been, on our late trip to Rhode Island, but energy and the faithful labors of his clergy, the Church leads all other religious bodies, in good works and influence. They have been especially unfortunate in their missionaries and agents, and their good name has suffered tion and thanks to which they are entitled. The great mass of the people who come first to a new and wild country, leave their religion, if they ever had any, behind. The conditions of their life are unfavorable to any religious observance. There is no Sunday. Even now, in Virginia City, the banks are open on Sunday. The spirit and example of reckless leaders is contagious. Men are generally young and strong, the majority of them without home influence, success depending upon daring and endurance, rather than on character and principle. It is difficult to gather a congregation even in the towns, and all missionwork is an exploration of a wilderness, among dangerous defiles, over dangerous roads, and by traveling distances that are astonishing to those that live where railroads reach every little business centre. Mr. Prout here, for example, rides 20 miles in a buggy or wagon, for morning service, and returns for another service. The Bishop, in ten years, has traveled 40,000 miles by stage, and this present year will make about 3,000 miles in that way. The physical endurance needful for this is something that commands the admiration even of these western men; yet he must be ready to preach every night, if a place can be found, and start perhaps for the next station at two o'clock in the morning.

A visit to the famous Alder Gulch would be incomplete without a look at the "gold diggings." Compared with former days, it is now very dull in this branch of business, but some gold is taken out all the time. I saw bags of the precious metal at one of the banks, as it came from the mines. It does not take a large pile to make a thousand dollars. At this bank, a year ago, at mid-day, three rough looking fellows came in, apparently to sell some "dust," but instead of drawing gold from their pockets they drew steel. The cashier was alone, and they "had the drop" on him; one watched the door, another held the revolver in painful proximity to the cashier's head, while the third "prospected." Taking all the gold in sight, about $4,500, they mounted their horses at the door and departed for parts unknown. The alarm spread rapidly, they were pursued by a hundred horsemen, but got away. By sunrise the next morning they had gone a hundred miles, as was afterwards learned. The man that held their horses at the door was caught and is now in the penitentiary, I notice that banks in Montana now have screens over the counter-and lock the side door.

I have just been strolling, with Mr. Prout, down the valley, to see the "clearing up" of one of the little mines. They are working over old ground. There is not a foot of it, for miles along the stream, that has not been dug over and washed. Three men work here together; there are larger companies at work in some places, and sometimes a miner works alone. Here, they dig down some distance and drift under, drawing up the gravel and sand with a windlass. This they throw into a trough through which the water of the stream is running rapidly; the softer portions are carried away by the water, the stones are picked out by hand, and a heavy black sand settles, with the fine pieces of gold, at the bottom, and is caught in holes called "riffles," which are bored in the false bottom of the trough. The result of the day's work seemed very meagre, as it was collected in a pan, the precious specks of gold shining in the sand, but it was enough to pay fair wages for the work. Of course, gold costs all that it is worth, in labor, else it could not long remain such a steady measure of value. The uncertainty of the yield and the occasional "luck" that falls to the miner, make the pursuit of it very exciting.

We came back to town over the foot-hills, and had a glorious view of the sunset behind the range of the Ruby mountains. They seemed well named, deepening in color from a delicate purple to dark wine color, as the light departed. On all sides the hills sloped away and swelled up the granite peaks where the snow lay in long lines fringing their barren sides. A delicate green clothed the near landscape, without tree or shrub to break its billowy undulations, while farther off and higher, dark pines were scattered on the hill-sides and massed in gloomy belts along the mountain ranges. From the old cemetery on the bleak hill-top we almost leaped into the streets of the queer little town, and after a delightful evening with the Meteor Club, I am ready for a few hours' sleep and the morning

Italy-Milan and Genoa.

Correspondence of the LIVING CHURCH. ROME, ITALY, June, 29, 1880.

Our visit to Italy could not have been inaugurated in a pleasanter and more charming manner than by the delightful stay in this city of Milan. There is a wonderful history connected with this magnificent old city, a history full of all the changes and ruin wrought by almost constant war from the time of its subjugation by the Romans. two hundred years before the Christian Era, until the war of 1859, when it became a part of the Kingdom of Italy. Truly the poor Milanese have had a hard time during all these centuries. Several times has their city been razed to the ground. Several times nearly all of the inhabitants have been put to the sword. They have been like chessmen, played by different hands in many games of war, and at times tossed violently from the boards with ruined castles and decapitated men. There the Gauls, the Romans, the Huns, and the Goths have ruled. And in later years Spain, Austria and France have successively held dominion. Modern Milan bears no marks of such a history. Its clean, well paved streets, its Italian can talk louder and faster, and make more beautiful and magnificent buildings, the vivacity of its people, make it seem almost like a second Paris. In size and opulence it is one of the foremost of the Italian cities, and in beauty, we think, it is second only to Florence.

There were two things we wished particularly to see in Milan-the Cathedral, and the Arcade. Very different indeed they are. One, the perfection of all that is grand and beautiful in church architecture. The other, the most brilliant scene of business, fashion and pleasure. We saw both the first night we were there. We passed the great pile of white marble, with its statue crowned pinnacles pointing to the starry heavens. We saw it in its fullest glory bathed in the soft moonlight. And with souls impressed by the solemnity of such a sight, we seemed to pass from the heavenly to the earthly, from the infinite to the finite as we entered the Arcade. And yet, if it did seem finite, in contrast to the great Cathedral, how brilliant and dazzling it appeared, with its great glass roof and dome lighted by thousands of jets; with its elegant stores and caffees; with its marble mozaic streets, thronged by the determined to try the effect of a bribe upon one fashionable and the gay, who seemed as happy of the noble spade carriers of the palace. A "tip" and light-hearted as though they fancied this bright scene a little heaven, and each little light with a pass key, and once more we were free. in the brilliant dome a star of eternity, and that Again, however, we encountered the great Doorhere they would live on in bliss forever. Late keeper, and, after receiving a volley of threats, that night, as we stood by our window, we thought that by this time the lights in the brilliant dome were put out; all of the windows in to the outer gate which fortunately we found unthe stores were darkened; all of the people gone locked. We visited no more villas at Genoa, and home to rest, and the wide marble streets left only breathed freely, when, late that night, we dark and cheerless; and then, we turned again to bade farewell to the city of Columbus and sped the great white Cathedral, and it seemed more beautiful than ever. Its tall pinnacles; its great dome; its high spire rose far above the surrounding buildings, and seemed to point from the world below, with its noise and bustle, to the heaven above, full of peace and purity.

The next morning, the first place we visited was the great Duomo. We paused a moment before the beautiful facade of white Carrara marble, and then, entering, beheld the grandest interior in the world. It would be useless to attempt to describe it. Many of the best writers on Architecture have deemed themselves incapable of such a task. In mute wonder we looked down its long double aisles; at its clustered pillars; its lofty arches; its fret-work, carving and statues. Then our amazement gave way to a A quiet home-like resort for those needing rest feeling of delight. With souls full of ever deep- or treatment. Summers remarkably cool; climate ening emotion, we walked down the nave to the great chancel, and stood before the three large For circulars, address, N. A. Pennoyer, M. D., windows behind the choir. Beautiful with their or E. Pennoyer, Proprietor.

tracery, and stained glass, in whose colors the ruby and dark blue predominates, they shed through the broad aisles and down the marble floor rays of that dim religious light that lends so much to worship.

There are many important objects of interest in the Cathedral. The most interesting is the Vault of San Carlo Borromeo. It is entered by a spacious gallery lined with statues, and by a portal ornamented with beautiful columns. A dungeon, cold and cheerless in the dark, it is transformed by the light of the tapers into a palace of silver, gold and precious stones. A windlass slowly removes the front of the large silver casket, and then, within a crystal coffin, is seen the shrivelled mummy of a man, clothed with rich pontifical robes, crowned with a golden tiara, adorned with diamonds, rubies, emeralds -"every costly and magnificent gem." We wondered if he, whose only thought in life was of it to Christ, and signifying that nothing to be doing good, who sold all that he had to give the poor and relieve the distressed, would not diminish from nor add unto this sacred like so much silver and gold piled about his earthly tomb; so many diamonds and precious stones laid upon his worthless body, while so many thousands in the world without, so many even in his own city, were toiling and begging for bread? We thought not. But such is the way of the world, and if so much wealth must be laid at the grave of any mortal, surely no one deserves it more than good old San Carlo Bor-

> Two other churches we visited at Milan-Sant' Ambrogio and Santa Maria della Grazie. In the former are some frescoes of the twelfth century, and a great many very ancient sepulchral effigies of Bishops and Abbots. At the Church of Santa Maria we saw "The Last Supper," by Leonardo da Vinci. It was with no little feeling of emotion that we looked upon this great painting, which has been so widely copied all over the world. And, contrary to the usual experience of those who come to see this picture, we were agreeably disappointed, for it was not half so badly marred or disfigured as we expected to find it. And to us it still bore visible marks of the great genius that has made it so renowned.

> At the Brera we visited the Academy of Arts and Sciences, and for the first time looked upon the work of the old masters. Of course it was only a taste, compared to the great feast we expect to have in the galleries at Rome, Florence, and Dresden. And yet we are not sure but, like the first taste of some new fruit, it may have been the sweetest. The finest work in this gallery is the noted painting by Raphael—the "Marriage of St. Joseph and the Virgin " Here, also, for the first time, we beheld the work of the great Thorwaldsen and his great work, the monument of Appiani-The Three Graces and Cupid.

After leaving Milan we spent one day in Genoa, called "La Superba." Why it was given this name, we know not, for we failed to see anything particularly beautiful about it, except the gold and silver filagree work for which the city is so noted. It may look beautiful at a distance, for it is beautifully situated, but it is all but beautiful to one lost in the labyrinth of its crooked narrow streets, surrounded by a crowd of dirty, loud talking Italians-venders of countless articles. We have come to the conclusion that an noise in a general way than a representative of any other nationality on the face of the earth. And one seeking a place for a season of quiet and rest, should go any where in preference to an Italian city. Genoa has many beautiful villas. One of these we visited in company with our esteemed fellow-traveler. Being unaccustomed to the ways of the place, we deemed it advisable to disregard, with considerable vehemence, the proffered attendance of a tall Italian at the gate, whom we supposed to belong to that detestable army of bores-the foreign guides-and to seek our own pleasure in cur own way, amid the shaded walks and pleasant avenues of the lovely villa. The polite gentleman proved, however, to be the General Manager or Doorkeeper of the villa, whose duty it was to show visitors through the grounds. And we had raised his wrath to such an extent at our unpardonable impudence, that when we sought egress from the beautiful garden we found the great iron gate closed and locked. For the first time in our life we were a prisoner, but rather than stay and die an ignoble death, we of ten centimes brought to the gate a workman with accompanying gesticulations from the offended gentleman, we beat an honorable retreat rapidly away to Rome. Hon. Joshua Tuthill, of East Saginaw, Mich., says: "Count me among the enthusiastic friends of HUNT'S REMEDY. It has proven in my case all you claim for it. Having suffered for about twenty years with severe disease of the kidneys (which our local physicians pronounced Bright's disease). I made a journey East to consult the eminent Dr. Haven, of Hamilton, New York, of whose fame in this specialty I had heard much. Dr. Haven examined me carefully and simply said, 'go and get a bottle of HUNT'S REMEDY and take according to directions.' After having traveled so far for treatment, it struck me as rather funny to be directed to take a medicine which I might have bought within a stone's throw of my own door, but I was in the doctor's hands, and of course I followed his advice, and right glad was I that I didso, for before I had taken HUNT'S REMEDY half a dozen times I found immense benefit from it, and by continuing the use of it for a limited time I recovered from my trouble entirely, and am to-day, I think one of the most rugged of rugged Michiganders. The world is indebted to you, sir, for the promulgation of such a medicine, and I hope you may not go without your reward."

The Increase of the Episcopate

Some remarks of our Western correspondent, about the work in one of our great Missionary Districts, suggests to the that the Church, in those Territories that supervision, has established her influence and extended her work in advance of all other religious bodies. She is, to-day, the past and present conditions of this pi oneer work, that to the energy and influence of the Bishops whom she has sent, Ministry is desirable, and for that we work measure of her success. It is no dispar- agreement about the increase in the highagement to her faithful missionary Priests est order, as well as in the two that are to say this. The Bishops have done what derived from it? as Priests they could not have done. They have gone out representing the whole Church, selected with especial reference to the needs of the work, and commanding respect by their very name and office of Bishop. Contrast the progress of the Church under this policy, with her progress, or want of progress, in colonial times. when she had no Bishops. The comparison will not hold, in all respects, but it of sending Apostles to lead the way in missionary work.

What is true of our work in the Territories, is true of our work in the States; partly for the same reason, that it is still largely missionary work, and partly for discuss now. The record of "small" dioceses sustains us in the assertion that a large increase in our Episcopate would result in a large increase of growth to the

The erection of new dioceses and misincrease in numbers. It is suspected by some of our conservative brethren of the East, that the desire of western Dioceses to multiply; to secure more Episcopal supervision, is due to the promptings of a revolutionary spirit, or to the ambition to gain votes and influence in the General Convention, or is a part of some scheme to push forward and make prominent some particular "school," or party. Ecclesiastical politicians see in this tendency a menace to their "balance of power;" high toned Episcopalians fancy they see in it a fading out of the royal purple, a cheapening of the Episcopal lawn. It would be a sad falling off if Bishops should become common.

The sooner we get rid of this English tradition that the dignity of the Episcopate depends upon its being restricted to the charge of a large number of clergy; and of the American idea, that supervision of many square miles and vast population makes a Bishop important, the better it will be for the Church in this country. We have been dying of dignity long enough. Respectability has reigned over us for a hundred years, while the Methodists and Roman Catholics have gone forward to possess the land. Whatever seemed available for work they have not hesitated to use, while our chief concern seems to have been about dignity and order and Ecclesiastical proprieties. These are all very well, in their way, and not to be de-

The opposition to "small" dioceses and the increase of the Episcopate, is in part due, no doubt, to other causes; other reasons, at least, are assigned by those who take that ground; but in all discussions, public and private, this teeling finds expression, more or less distinctly, that by such a policy we are going to lower the Episcopal dignity, to cheapen the office. In the last General Convention this sentiment was voiced, and one reverend speaker went so far as to predict that the clergy would be weaklings, who should be gathered in small dioceses under small Bishops; while the past policy of the Church had developed a "robust" clergy!

If the Episcopate is an Ecclesiastical ar-LIVING CHURCH a few reflections. From istocracy, it behooves us to make it very these and other descriptions, it is evident choice by keeping its numbers down to the minimum. If it is, however, the great have had competent and early Episcopal Apostolic Order of the Church of Christ, we need not, it would seem, be over anxious about its dignity. We trust no reader of the LIVING CHURCH will fail to read the stirring words from Bishop Tuttles' address, at the Montana Convention, published elsewhere. Behold a Bishop who is a Bishop indeed!

We are glad to see that there is one school where young women can be educated. - The Advance asks if it may have a vacation. Why not? It can be spared for one week. There are some papers that could easily be spared for a longer period. The Little Episcopalian thinks it ought not to retain the diminutive title longer. We think so too and congratulate our contemporary on the increase that has enabled it to come to fuller age. The proposed name, Banner of the Cross is a great improvement.—A Noble example, well worthy of imitation, is that of Leonard Sprague, of Pontiac, Michigan. He died on the 24th ult., leaving his whole property to his parish church, the poor, and to the various missions of the Church in the Diocese. - In 1853; Dr. Shears established the Suburban Home School, at New Haven, Connecticut. Historical Illustrations of the Old Testament, by Rev. G. Rawlinson, M. A., Chicago, Henry A. Sumner & Co., $1.00.

This is a new edition of an interesting work originally published by the London Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. Few readers are unacquainted with some of the works of Canon Rawlinson, who has proved himself a very prolific, yet none the less careful, writer. Historical Illustrations begins with the Book Genesis, noticing matters here and there, of ING CHURCH. special interest, through the most of the Old Testament. A few of these are: "Traditions of Paradise," "Supposed 'Mistakes' of the Writer Examined," "Hebrew Art at the time of the Exodus," "Supposed 'Historical Inaccuracies of the Book of Daniel," "Charges Brought Against the Book of Esther," etc. The positions taken are clearly stated and well supported by numerous illustrations from art, contemporary profane history, recent discoveries, etc. Professor H. B. Hackett, the American editor, has added several appendices, all of which are an additional help in understanding many of the vexed questions in Old Testament history.

The last few days, since the copious rains, has been more comfortable, and there is a slight decrease in the mortality of young children. It has fallen to seventy a day, and in any other city that would arouse attention. We are used to it, and our filthy streets, in some of them, it is long since the pavement was seen, excite no special interest. We pay for cleaning them, and what else can we do.

The artistic skill of Mr. Geissler is shown to good effect in the Hymn Board that he has lately placed in S. Augustine's Chapel, Trinity Parish, N. Y. It is a gift of one of the late confirmation classes of the Chapel, and nothing could be more satisfactory to those who had part in its presentation. On entering the door, it attracts the eye immediately, the gold letters being plainly seen across the long distance to where the board is

They can be read almost equally well from every part of the Church, the peculiar from every part of the Church, the peculiar roughness of the surface reflecting the rays in all directions. A feature to be noted is the apparently fixedness of the figures. They look to be engraved especially for the occasion. This is caused by the way in which the movable blocks, which announce the number of the hymns, are placed. They do not slide in a groove, as in most hymn boards. They are all the same size, and a space is cut out along side the word "Hymn," exactly large enough to admit three of them. The board has then the appearance of being perfectly whole. Since they are perpendicular, the blocks stay by their own weight, and can be removed, and replaced by others with the greatest ease. They are so nicely fitted, that there is not the least danger of their falling state and Manroe Streets.

When a hymn is used, in whose number are less than three digits, one or two blocks, marked with a small cross, are placed with the number. When any particular hymn is to be omitted, three small crosses appear. The board is stationary on the wall of the Church, after the manner of a memorial tablet; but, unlike a tablet, it harmonizes so finely with the decorative coloring of the wall, as to give the idea that it is a part of the original plan. As a work of art it reflects great credit upon Mr. Geissler. There is nothing gaudy about it, but you at once notice a richness that is in perfect keeping with the other embellishments of the Chapel. The idea is original, and the work, as it stands, is the most unique and satisfactory of the kind we have ever seen.

A Plea for the Dumb Animals.

Ye call them dumb, and deem it well, Howe'er their bursting hearts may swell, They have no voice their woes to tell, As fabulists have dreamed. They cannot cry, "O Lord, how long Wilt Thou, the patient Judge and strong, Behold Thy creatures suffer wrong Of those Thy blood redeemed?

Yet are they silent? need they speech His holy sympathies to reach, Who by their lips could prophets teach, And for their sakes would spare; When, wrestling with his own decree, To save repentant Nineveh, He found, to strengthen mercy's plea, "So many cattle" there?

Have they no language? Angels know, Who take account of every blow; And there are angel hearts below On whom the Eternal Dove His pentacostal gift hath poured, And that forgotten speech restored That filled the garden of the Lord When Nature's voice was love!

O, blest are they the creatures bless. And yet that wealth of tenderness, In look, in gesture, in caress, By which our hearts they touch, Might well the thoughtful spirit grieve, Believing—as we must believe— How little they from man receive, To whom they give so much!

They may be silent, as ye say,
But woe to them who, day by day,
Unthinking for what boon they pray,
Repeat, "Thy kingdom come."
Who, when before the great white Throne They plead that mercy may be shown, Find awful voices drown their own— The voices of the dumb!

Many persons, ladies and children, that could not swim, were floating about, serenely and securely, on their backs, as much at home as the most experienced swimmers, I had the pleasure of making several acquaintances in the water, being introduced and shaking hands "on the wing," as it were. It is needless to say that I could not recognize my new friends afterwards, on land, but we had a good laugh on being introduced over again. So, boys, don't be ashamed of being polite. If you want to be manly, be gentlemanly.

A few weeks since the Superintendent of one of our large Sunday Schools was called away, and asked a gentleman, a comparatively new comer to the parish, to take charge of the school. This gentleman, before beginning the service, which had been used for several years without change, went into an elaborate explanation of the same, telling the children precisely what fected tone of voice. "Finally," said he, "my dear children, I hope when we come here to say the Lord's Prayer, I hope I shall hear every little voice repeating every word clearly and distinctly." I think she loved Harry better than any of them. "For 'twas you taught me first, about Jesus," she said to the boy one day, "and 'twas you brought me to Church to be made God's own child; and now, perhaps before long, He'll send His Angel to say 'I want little Mary;' and then I shall be happier even than I am here. I was naughty the other day, Harry; I screamed because the pain was so bad, and then I minded what the lady-I mean our teacher —said about being patient; and nurse just said, 'Mary;' and don't you see, just because of my name, and when it was given me, I knowed I ought to try and bear the pain; and I said, 'Our Pather,' and it seemed to help me.'

That night God's Angel came to the ward, and called little Mary home. Surely the child had learned the lesson we ought to remember each time we hear our Christian name; the lesson that, when it was given us in our Baptism, we promised to lead good and holy lives, and to bear all things patiently, because of our Father's great love for us, in sending His Son to die for our sins.

Seventh Annual Convocation.

Missionary District of Montana, Idaho, and Utah.

Correspondence of the LIVING CHURCH.

MONTANA, July 16, 1880.

e Convocation of this Missionary District meets in St. Peters's Church, Helena, next Sunday, and will probably continue in session three days. The following clergy of Montana are expected: Revs. E. G. Prout, of Virginia City, M. N. Gilbert, of Helena, Geo. Stewart, of Missoula, C. O., Tillotson, of Butte, F. B. Lewis, of Bozeman, S. C. Blackiston, of Helena. The Rev. R. M. Kirby will represent the southern portion of the District. To attend the Convocation he will travel a day and night by rail, and thirty hours by stage. The expense, is over a hundred dollars. It is evident that a large delegation could not be expected from Utah.

On Sunday morning, Aug. 1, the Convocation sermon will be preached by a visiting clergyman from the diocese of Quincy; the Bishop's Address will be read on the following day; business meetings on Monday and Tuesday, and in the evenings of those days, service and addresses by tize all children when desired; you will bury the the Bishop and other clergy. By favor of the Bishop I am able to send you some extracts from his Address.

During the last year the number of clergy in Montana has doubled, a handsome stone church has been completed at Helena, and the parish to discharge all ministerial acts to the whole has become self-supporting, under the energetic community. administration of the Rev. M. N. Gilbert. I may also add, as an item that will please your publisher, that a number of subscribers have been secured for the LIVING CHURCH, during this period.

Thirteen years ago, Bishop Tuttle and the Rev. E. N. Goddard, held the first service within what is now St. Peter's parish. There are now over 100 communicants.

The church has cost about $11,000, and has a debt of nearly $2,000, which the parish will be able to carry, and to meet as the obligations mature. This is the only debt on any church building in Bishop Tuttle's District. Arrangements are in progress for building at Butte and Ben-

The work of the Church in this great western country, is in good hands, and well administered. True, the country is large, and the laborers are few, but they are all good, strong men, and such only can do anything here.

I am constrained to add, what I am sure every visitor would say, that Bishop Tuttle is allowed to do too much. Planting the Church in the Territories is not like cultivating it in older fields. Success depends on the personal and pastoral work of the Bishop, at first; not upon his official acts or general administration, so much as upon his influence with families and individuals. This he cannot extend and continue over three vast and rapidly developing Territories. He may consume all his time and wear out all his strength. and not go over one-half his field as he would like to do. It is a work that a priest cannot do with the same effect and result as a Bishop, It is because he is a Bishop that he comes with influence and commands attention. Of course he can hold this only as he is a brave and good man.

During the year, the Bishop has visited 58 towns, preached 132 sermons, confirmed 108 persons, baptized 53. Eight months of the twelve, ending May 1, he was traveling in the field, upon Episcopal visitations, and with all that could not get over it all. The Bishop expresses himself emphatically, as you will read, concerning the need of another bishop in these Territories. A long list of places not yet visited, is given in the address, but is not forwarded in this letter, as I think you will have space for only a portion.

EXTRACTS FROM BISHOP TUTTLE'S ADDRESS.

conviction of the truth; experience of the past, knowledge of the present, forecast by the future, agree in pressing deep the conviction that the Church, while suffering three Territories to be the charge of one Bishop, is not laying hands for guidance, as she should, upon the sturdy infancy of these vigorous and intelligent populations. My opinion remains unchanged, that, leaving Utah and Idaho, perhaps at present, together, Montana, rapidly and substantially developing as it is, should have a Bishop of its own. And what I say to you, I shall feel constrained to say in New York city, this fall, and to the General Convention, which is now the Board of Missions of the Church. The people of the mountains are such, I think, as our own Church can, through fidelity and patience, largely mould for the better and guide to the higher.

"Go ye, make disciples of all nations." To us, we believe, the injunction is given. I cannot see how its breadth and fullness allow us to culthose whom we may call our own Church people. We are debtors to all, to preach to them Christ those Church principles, you, each in the comrights or tastes of Methodist and Presbyterian tion! congregations around you, still less will you be brethren. Be prompt to fulfil personal engagements. Those with tradesmen, and all with whom you have to deal, of course. But I mean also pastoral engagements; to baptize children, to make pastoral visits, to distribute Prayer Books, for Lenten work, to get ready and carry through classes for Confirmation. A clergyman sadly weakens his influence in a business community, by not being scrupulously prompt to meet his promises, to the day and letter. By the Christian, surely, our blessed Lord's triumphant consummation of His Redemption work should be as sacredly commemorated as His lowly birth in entering thereupon. Why neglect Ascension Day, any more than Christmas Day?

The beauty of the Church Services, and their value in inciting real devotion, depend largely cient labor pledged to complete a neat, Churchly upon the earnestness and heartiness with which edifice, if the means can be gotten to procure the congregation take their part in them. Morning Prayer was said by the Rev. Dr. Ashley and the Rev. Geo. W. Dunbar, Chaplain, mon, from I. Tim. vi:13,14. After the sermon, the Rev. Dr. Ashley, President of the Standing Committee of Wisconsin, whom the Bishop had appointed to act as the instituting Priest, said the Office, Mr. Samuel Barstow, Senior Warden, "presenting the keys of the church to the new incumbent," and the Bishop reading the "Letter of Institution," and presenting to the incumbent "the Bible, Prayer Book, and Canons." The instituted Rector then proceeded to administer the Holy Eucharist to his congregation, assisted by the instituting Priest.

The whole congregation evinced a deep and reverent interest in this admirable and Catholic service; and can hardly fail to have been impressed by it with such a sense of the reality and importance of the "sacerdotal relation," as they who have never witnessed it are not so likely to have. Is not the very common, and it would seem growing neglect of the "Office of Instituone great reason why the pastoral relation is so lightly esteemed, and so frequently and harmfully broken in this Church, and why some Vestries seem to regard the ordained Ministers of Christ rather as hirelings, to be dismissed at their discretion, than as Ambassadors for Christ. and Stewards of the mysteries of God, to disesteem and despise whom, is to despise Him Whose Ministers they are?
